Raymond Walters students protest use of cards in student body election.

By Mark Soward

Raymond Walters students Friday afternoon questioned this term's student body election by stamping their cards in protest. The students were attending a workshop given by Bennis about the system requiring both ID's to vote. Bennett is excited about the potential of the system, and believes that it can help to answer student concerns.

The device, known as a TV typewriter program, was demonstrated to the Cincinnati University board of governors. It allows students to punch a number and see a result on the TV screen.

CCM freshman buzzes through Ohio Honey Queen contest

By Michelle Liberman

Do you realize that this year's Ohio Honey Queen is buzzing about a blossoming campus right at this very moment? Patricia Short, a CCM freshman, is the Honey Queen. The Honey Queen is chosen annually at the Ohio Beekeepers' Association's convention in Columbus (held this year on March 15), Short said.

Short said her father, who began beekeeping in a hobby four years ago, is a member of the OBA. "There are some people that do this professionally, usually after they retire," she said. Short said she had considered running for OBA Honey Queen earlier this year but had forgotten to enter. "It was more or less a challenge thrown if I could do it," she remarked.

About a week before the convention, she said, an old friend and former Honey Queen asked if she would still run for this year's Honey Queen. She decided to enter.

Since the Honey Queen competition isn't a beauty contest, the contestants compete for the title in other ways, Short said. First, each must write an autobiography describing her activities within the last year, she said. In addition, each must submit six recipes using honey and write a 300-word essay about honey, she added. Short said she explained the different varieties and uses of honey in her essay.

The contestants' ability to meet and communicate with people was then judged while they mingled with the swarm of beekeepers at the convention.

Finally, each girl was interviewed for one hour by the judges, then turned over the swarm of bees to the contestants.

Short spent an entire week preparing her presentation for the convention. On March 15, she and her father went to Columbus where Short flew her way to Honey Headquarters. "It's my representation of the OBA, I hope to bring more attention to the beekeeping hobby," she said.

Short said her father's beekeeping hobby "is really great... After you get the bees and the equipment, it's almost like getting the honey free; it's got to be as much as I want down later to school."

At Ohio Honey Queen for 1975-76, Short said she will appear at four or five county fairs this summer in addition to the Ohio State Fair and the Lebanon Honey Festival in September.

"At the Lebanon Honey Festival, as part of being Honey Queen, I have to kiss a man that has a barbeque," she said.

The bees go self on honey; they won't ring you all. A man takes them and puts them in his life like a bread," she said.

Short said she plans to enter the National Honey Queen competition in January at Pittsburgh. Since she is a true major, she said she will sing in the talent competition.

If crowned National Honey Queen, Short will serve during 1975, she explained.

The hive itself is an honor, but the competition itself is a challenge, she added.

Phoebe Snow and Jackson Browne: No superfluous air

By Belinda Baxter

Phoebe Snow and Jackson Browne, whose concerts have consistently sold out as they tour across the country, appeared last Thursday night at State College. Jackson and Phoebe's tunes complement each other well as they generated a mellow, laid-back atmosphere. Phoebe Snow, the vocalist from New York whose Rolling Stone magazine designated as "Best New Artist of 1974," enthralled the audience. She took over the stage in a soft voice, a fact well known to her audience. Unlike many performers, she spent time with the audience, building rapport and ensuring that they were comfortable. Phoebe's voice is often described as "husky and soft," and her guitar playing is equally versatile. She has a wide vocal range, from very high to very low. Her presence on stage was captivating, and the audience responded enthusiastically.

The audience grinned and stomped their feet as she sang "Good Vibrations." She also sang "The Only Living Boy in New York," which was her debut single and became an instant hit. Jackson, who often used his voice to express his emotions, sang "Take It Easy." His deep, rich voice added a sense of gravitas to the performance. The audience was thoroughly captivated by the talent of both performers, and there was a palpable sense of connection between the musicians and the audience.

The performances were held at the University Center, and the atmosphere was relaxed and intimate. The stage was lit with warm, amber lights, creating a cozy and inviting atmosphere. The audience was a mixture of young and old, and they were all engrossed in the music. The performances were a testament to the power of music to bring people together and to create a sense of community.

Phoebe and Jackson were perfect on stage together. Their voices complemented each other, and their music was a perfect harmony. Their performance was a testament to the power of music to transcend time and space, and to bring people together in a shared experience. The audience, which was filled to capacity, was thoroughly enjoying the performance. The energy on stage was electric, and the audience was fully engaged in the music.

The performances were not just about the music, but also about the connection between the musicians and their audience. Phoebe and Jackson were both masters of their craft, and they used their music to create a sense of community and to bring people together. The performances were a reminder of the power of music to bring people together and to create a sense of belonging. The audience left the performances with a sense of fulfillment and a renewed appreciation for the power of music.
